FOREWORD

R. LEANDER J. McCORMICK of Chicago in 1896 published a "Family Record and Biography" tracing the lineage of the descendants in America of Captain James McCormick, one of the prominent defenders of Londonderry in the famous Siege of the year 1689 in which the Protestants of that city were beleaguered for some three and a half months by the Royalist forces of James II.

As a matter of family record it has now been thought desirable to bring up to date the information collected by that fine old gentleman in so far as it particularly concerns the descendants of his distinguished father, Robert McCormick. The compiler wishes it had been possible to include biographical mention of those members of the family not already noticed in his grandfather's volume, but many other claims on the available time have prevented pursuit of the matter thus far.

The plan followed in presenting the data is the simplest that could occur to the compiler. The five tables represent respectively the lines of descent from five out of the eight children of Robert and Mary Ann (Hall) McCormick. The second child, Robert Hall, and the third, Susan Jane, died in early youth, and the seventh child and fifth son, John Prestly, died at the age of twenty-eight without having married.

The making of this little work has been a labor of love. As the compiler has already pleaded in a companion genealogical work relative to the family of his maternal great-grandfather, he must ask forgiveness for the manner in which his relatives near and far, known and some hitherto unknown, have been called upon for what has amounted to the revival of long-forgotten details. But it is hoped that many of the "victims" will be secretly pleased, since do we not all appreciate being reminded occasionally that the course of Humanity is never-ending, that we ourselves should not be here but for those who have gone before?

* * * * *

To many of my kin I owe a very deep debt of gratitude for their assistance in supplying the dates of births, marriages and deaths in their branches of the family. Those to whom words of special acknowledgement are due are my cousins Cyrus H. McCormick, Robert H. McCormick, Chauncey McCormick, Amanda Adams Tracy, Anna Chapman Dunn, Robert McCormick Adams (son of Robert McCormick Adams, 1st), Carolyn Shields Cheney and Genevieve Lewis Sheridan. The short accounts given of Robert McCormick and his wife Mary Ann Hall have been compiled chiefly from a brochure published in 1910 jointly by my Uncle, the late Robert Hall McCormick, and my cousin, the late James Hall Shields, and from Professor William T. Hutchinson's life of Cyrus Hall McCormick, published in 1930 by the Century Company.

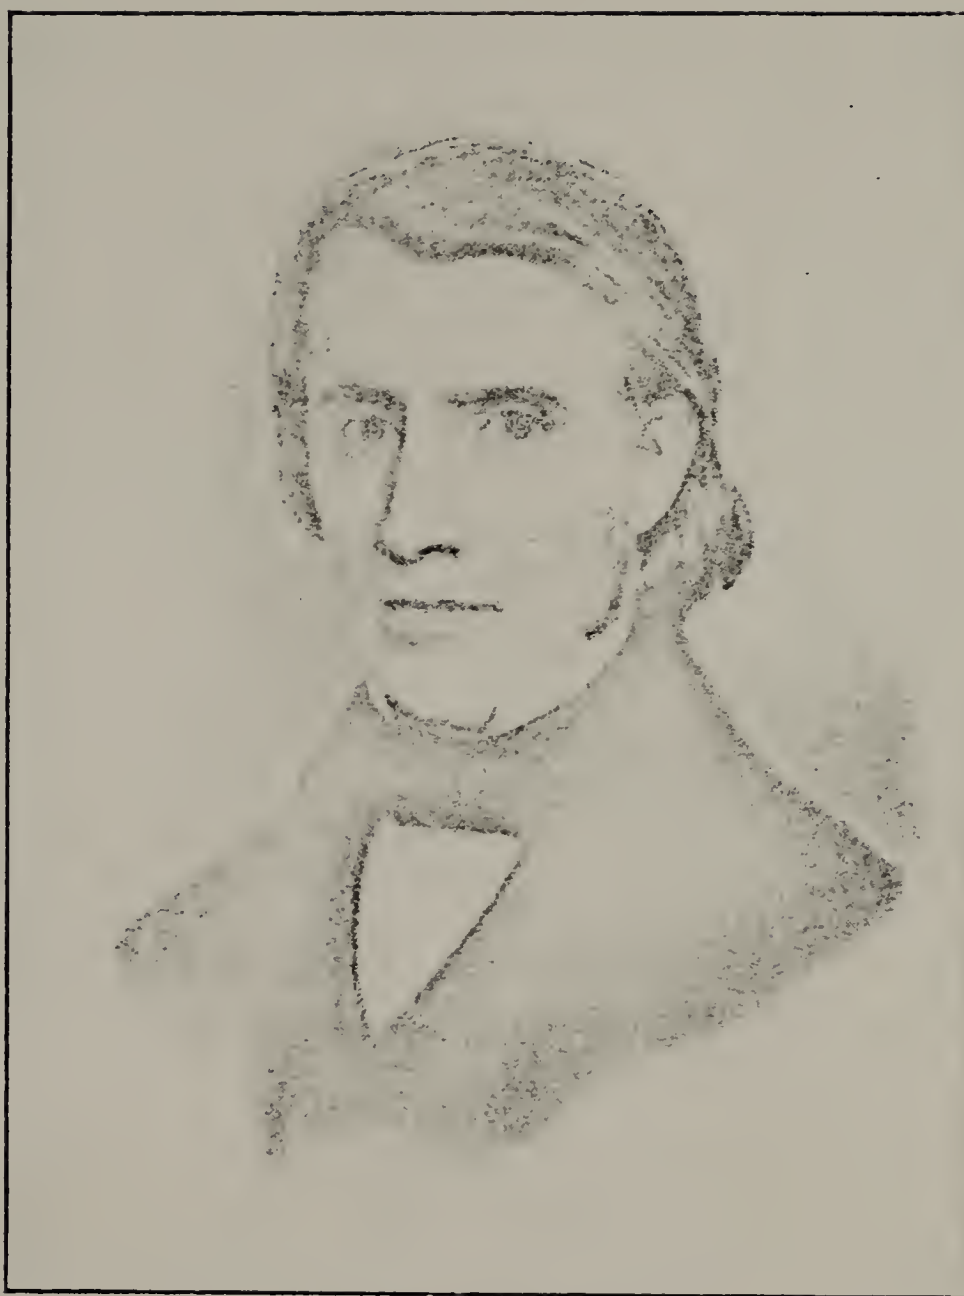

I shall always feel grateful to my relatives for any additions or corrections they may be in a position to make.

"Sine Timore"
*"Without Fear"

*Generally acknowledged motto of the McCormick family in the United States. The crest is a "dexter hand holding a spear in pale ppr". The motto is given to the Irish family of the name in Burke's General Armory but to the Scottish family in Fairbairn's Crests. This authority gives no motto for the Irish family but from another source the Irish motto has been stated to be: "Prius mori quam fidem fallere"—"Rather die than break faith". The Scottish McCormick crest is a martlet (i. e. a martin, type of swallow) poised on a rock.

ROBERT MCCORMICK

IN SPITE of the considerable amount of effort which has been expended in tracing the ancestors of Robert McCormick prior to Captain James McCormick of Londonderry fame, it is not possible to choose satisfactorily between the two lineages so far evolved by investigators. The one asserts that Robert's ancestors descended from remote Irish stock allied with the illustrious King Cormac (and so "Mac Cormac") who died in A. D. 260 and, more particularly, from one Donogh Mac-Cormac who lived at the beginning of the fifteenth century; the other that they migrated to Ulster at some period or other from Scotland. This period is sometimes said to have been the years following the flight from Ireland of the Earls of Tyrone and Tyrconnell in 1607, upon which James I of England inaugurated the so-called "Plantation of Ulster" by Scottish Colonists. It appears, however, to be established at least that Captain James' father was Thomas McCormick, born in 1610, and that Thomas' father was Hugh McCormick, born in 1570. But the Irish descent from further generations back, as at present worked out, involves the use of the variant "Mac Cormac" and the customary use of essentially Irish baptismal names such as Donogh, Reagh and Manus instead of such essentially Scotch names as Andrew and Ellin (two other children of Hugh) and of Anglo-Saxon names such as Richard, James and Thomas. On the other hand, if James' grandfather was Hugh, born in 1570 in Ireland, the family existed there forty years before the "Plantation of Ulster" and, if Scottish, must have migrated thither some time before that event. In view of the many unhappy troubles in Scotland this might easily have happened. It is certain that there was a large Scottish settlement in the middle of the sixteenth century in Antrim where Hugh McCormick, born in 1570, resided at a place with a Scottish name, Dunmakelter. The form of the name itself, McCormick, savours more of Scottish origin than Irish, but, again, a recently extinct Irish title of MacCormac carried the McCormick motto "Sine timore," thus pointing to a common Irish origin. The subject appears to require further study. So far as the McCormicks of Scotland are concerned, we know that they were, and still, presumably, are, a "sept," i.e. a division or subordinate branch, of the Clan Maclaine of Lochbuie.

Whatever the truth regarding the descent of the family prior to Captain James McCormick, one of the Ulster folk among the many who emigrated to America in the middle decades of the eighteenth century and settled to a large extent in Pennsylvania in the country of the Susquehanna river, was Thomas McCormick, son of the aforementioned Captain James.

Thomas crossed the Atlantic in 1735 at the same time as his elder brother Hugh. The two brothers at first settled in the country east of the Susquehanna. After an interval of years Thomas removed to what is now Cumberland County on the west or right bank of the river. Here Thomas and his wife resided on a good-sized farm which still remains in the ownership of the Harrisburg branch of the McCormick family, descendants of Thomas McCormick's second son James. Thomas' fifth son was Robert the elder, born in America in 1738. On reaching middle-age Robert with his next eldest brothers William and Hugh moved northwest to Juniata County, Pennsylvania, and resided there till 1779, when he sold his own property and took his wife (Martha Sanderson) and family down the Shenandoah Valley to the borders of Rockbridge County, Virginia, where he purchased a plantation of 450 acres and called it "Walnut Grove." Here his youngest son Robert, the subject of the present work, was born on June 8th, 1780. Little unfortunately is known of Robert's life during his first thirty years, i.e. until about 1810 and we can only guess that he had advantage of the somewhat simple educational facilities available and that he played a normal part in assisting his father on the plantation and in participating in the activities of the surrounding district. Some evidence is extant of his interest in local politics. His mother died in 1807 and shortly afterwards, on February 11th, 1808, he himself married an unusually active, intelligent and attractive girl, Mary Ann Hall, of Scotch-Irish descent, who lived only two miles away. Robert and his bride went to live with his father in the log house at "Walnut Grove." In 1810 ownership of the estate, now amounting to 532 acres, was transferred by sale from father to son, and Robert, senior, died there eight years afterwards in 1818. In 1822 Robert and his family moved into a spacious new brick residence which he had built to meet his growing needs, and this building still stands.

* * * * *

The period at which Robert McCormick first began to think of the probable advantages of the application of the principles of mechanics to agriculture is wrapt in obscurity. There are good grounds for supposing that he was experimenting with a machine to cut grain as early as 1810 when thirty years of age. In 1816 he was at work on a similar experiment using a "number of cylinders standing perpendicularly." But it is not until 1830 that we are presented with a definite picture of Robert's exceptional inventive genius. Towards the end of that year he took out a patent for an ingenious machine for breaking hemp and flax, or "hemp-break," consisting of only seven parts. To go with it and to work it he devised an apparatus operated by horses and also constructed another apparatus for cleaning the hemp after breakage. This combination of inventions is said to have been operated with success in the fall of 1831. The interest, however, which had arisen in the countryside over the possibilities of successfully raising hemp, died out and the demand for McCormick's invention never amounted to much although one or two of the machines appear to have been sold as far west as Kentucky. On the same date in 1830 Robert took out a patent at Washington for a hydraulic engine. To the plans for this machine he devoted a great deal of mental concentration but it does not appear that one was ever manufactured.

Robert was also one of the many, on both sides of the Atlantic, to devise a threshing machine. Although he is not known to have patented either the machine itself or the manner in which four horses were utilized to operate it, he had constructed and sold for approximately $70 each at least five complete units by the close of 1834. Why the manufacture of this successful machine was not continued is a mystery. A minor device originated by Robert and patented by him on April 20, 1831 was an automatic "self-stopper for stopping the motion of mills" after the grain had run out. This he made use of in his own grist-mill but apparently never ventured to manufacture it for sale. Likewise undeveloped apparently for the purposes of public use, was a "clover-sheller" of stone constructed for his own use in the manner of an ordinary mill. A development of more outstanding merit was a blacksmith's bellows of tub-like construction which was not patented but which achieved a considerable local popularity. Between 1830 and 1833 at least fifteen pairs of these bellows were sold at some $12.50 apiece. In a very different line of activity, the McCormick family were evidently of musical leanings and it is therefore hardly surprising that Robert should have thought out ways and means of improving instruction in the art of playing the violin. This improvement was patented on April 21st, 1831.

"WALNUT GROVE"
Note owned by Mr. Harold McCormick

But the achievement by which Robert McCormick's name will ever be perpetuated in history is his reaping machine of 1831. It was this machine of the pioneer farmer-mechanician of the Valley of Virginia which was destined to be the fore-runner of the long series of notable implements subsequently evolved and placed on the markets of the World by a family true to his traditions, inheritors of his inventive ability (Cyrus, his eldest son, himself secured the patent for a greatly superior machine on June 21st, 1834) and possessed, particularly in the person of this same eldest son, of an outstanding business capacity in the marketing of the product. Robert's machine, according to his son, who was destined to achieve even greater renown, "cut well in straight wheat." Thus, it would seem the principal hurdle in the great battle against nature was surmounted. Although it has frequently been printed, an account of Robert's reaping machine by his fourth son, Leander James, appears to be well worth requoteing. "In its main features this machine embodied the vital principles of all successful grain cutting machinery of the present day. It was drawn by two horses that walked in front of the main frame, and close to the standing grain. It had one main driving wheel in the main frame, and a grain wheel at the outer end of the platform. It had a cutter bar attached to and back of which was the platform on which the grain fell. The grain was cut by a vibrating sickle and drawn in to the sickle and cast down upon the platform by a revolving overhanging reel, which had slats or ribs which dipped into the grain in front of the sickle. The grain divider of this machine was a long pointed piece of wood extending some five feet forward of the cutter bar, with an upright post some ten inches forward of the sickle, to support the grain end of the reel. The entire side of the machine, from the point of the divider named, to the rear corner of the platform, and across the back of the platform was surrounded with an upright canvass, about three feet in width. The grain was raked off at the side in bundles by a man who walked beside the machine. The driver did not ride on the machine but on one of the horses that drew it."

Robert McCormick, to whose vision and inspiration the world must acknowledge an immeasurable debt, was a pious Presbyterian and took great pains to inculcate into his children a firm foundation of sound moral principles. He was a man of very great energy and determination of character, but withal of an exceptionally kind and generous disposition. Amongst his friends, although he appears to have made comparatively few of these owing to his retiring nature, he was highly esteemed as an upright, reliable citizen and one whose word was as good as his bond.

THE OLD SHOP AND MILL AT "WALNUT GROVE"
The shop is on the left. Here was carried out the practical work on many noteworthy inventions.

Throughout life he took great pleasure in the acquirement of historical and scientific knowledge and was particularly fond of astronomy. In addition to the time spent on his various inventions, he was able to carry on farming on a plantation which grew to a total of almost 1800 acres, and at the same time to operate flour-mills, saw-mills, kilns, blacksmith's and carpenter's shops and even a distillery.

Every thought, every trait, every act of Robert McCormick was characteristic and typical of the born inventor. His speculative, philosophical cast of mind, his lack of business acumen, his detachment from public life (he never held office or was called upon for military services) and his indifference to personal aggrandizement are all part and parcel of the distinctive personality complex that sets off the genuinely creative individual from his fellow-men. Except for an unfortunate step into the industrial and business world as an iron founder in partnership with his eldest son from 1836 to 1839, Robert labored quietly and diligently on his farms and in his shops all the days of his life.

In the late winter of 1845-6 Robert through exposing himself on one or more occasions in the open without adequate clothing, contracted a severe cold which settled in his lungs. He never recovered from the effects. After being bed-ridden for nine weeks he died on Independence Day, 1846, and now lies buried in Old Providence cemetery. Thus reads his simple obituary in the newspapers of the time: "Died at his residence on the 4th of this month, Robert McCormick, Esq., in the 66th year of his age. The deceased was a gentleman of great worth and respectability, and universally esteemed by his numerous acquaintances and neighbors."

"He was a devoted husband and father—a sincere and ardent friend, and in the strict sense of the word an honest man. He has left a numerous family and relatives to lament his death."

Robert's Last Will and Testament is a document of permanent interest to his family and is here reprinted in full:

I, Robert McCormick, of the County of Rockbridge, and State of Virginia, do make and publish this my last will and testament, hereby revoking and making void all other wills heretofore made by me, in the manner and form following, viz:

2nd: I give and bequeath to my beloved wife Mary, one-third part of my estate in lands during her natural life, and my negro woman Hannah, and Preston and Erasmus, and also my barouche and harness to be disposed of by her as she may think proper.

3rd: I give and bequeath to my daughter Amanda two beds, bedsteads, and furniture and a suitable outfit for housekeeping and the proceeds of ten machines made and sold this season, with their profits or losses after deducting all expenses of building, and a family of negroes, viz: Sally, her two children, Mary and ——— and ——— (which family I estimate at a thousand dollars) together with the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, including any sum I may have given to her or paid for Hugh Adams since her marriage, to be paid as follows, viz: Five hundred dollars on the first day of September next, and the balance in equal annual payments of (say five hundred dollars) it being understood that a part of this legacy (say one thousand dollars) has and will have been paid before the first of September next.

4th: I give and bequeath to my daughter Caroline her living on the plantation in a comfortable style so long as she remains unmarried (she devoting her care and attention to the interest of her brother) also two beds, bedsteads, and furniture and a suitable outfit for housekeeping, and the proceeds of ten machines, made and sold this season, with their profits and losses, after deducting all expenses of building, etc., and the further sum of two thousand and eight hundred dollars, bearing interest after the first day of June, 1847, and payable in four equal annual installments of seven hundred dollars each, after and on the first day of January, 1848; and also a family of negroes, viz: Peggy, her three children—Fanny, Amos and a sucking child.

5th: I give and bequeath to my son Cyrus H. my negro boy Sam, and girl Emily, and I hereby acknowledge myself indebted to him in the sum of one hundred and fifty-nine dollars and seventy-two cents upon a settlement made on the third day of February, 1846, as also in the further sum of fifteen dollars on each machine made and sold this season, the sale of which may or will have been actually received.

6th: I give and bequeath to my son Leander in addition to the plantation already deeded to him, a bed, a bedstead and furniture and my negro man Dick, and also the proceeds of one-third of all the machines made and sold this season, after deducting all expenses in building, delivering, etc., said machines, about which there exists a specific agreement, also a bay horse seven years old, a little sorrel mare three or four years old.

8th: As regards the legacy of two thousand eight hundred dollars left to my daughter Caroline in Article 4, upon further reflection I desire that it bear no interest so long as she remains on the plantation.

9th: I will and bequeath to my son William S. all the residue of my estate both real and personal of every kind and description requiring him to pay all my just debts and the foregoing legacies; and lastly, I do hereby appoint my son William S. McCormick executor of this, my last will and testament, written on a sheet of letter paper, and respectfully request that the worshipful, the County Court of Rockbridge require no security of him for his executorship. In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal this 19th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-six.

ROBERT MCCORMICK.

Signed, sealed and delivered in presence of us who have signed in presence of each other.

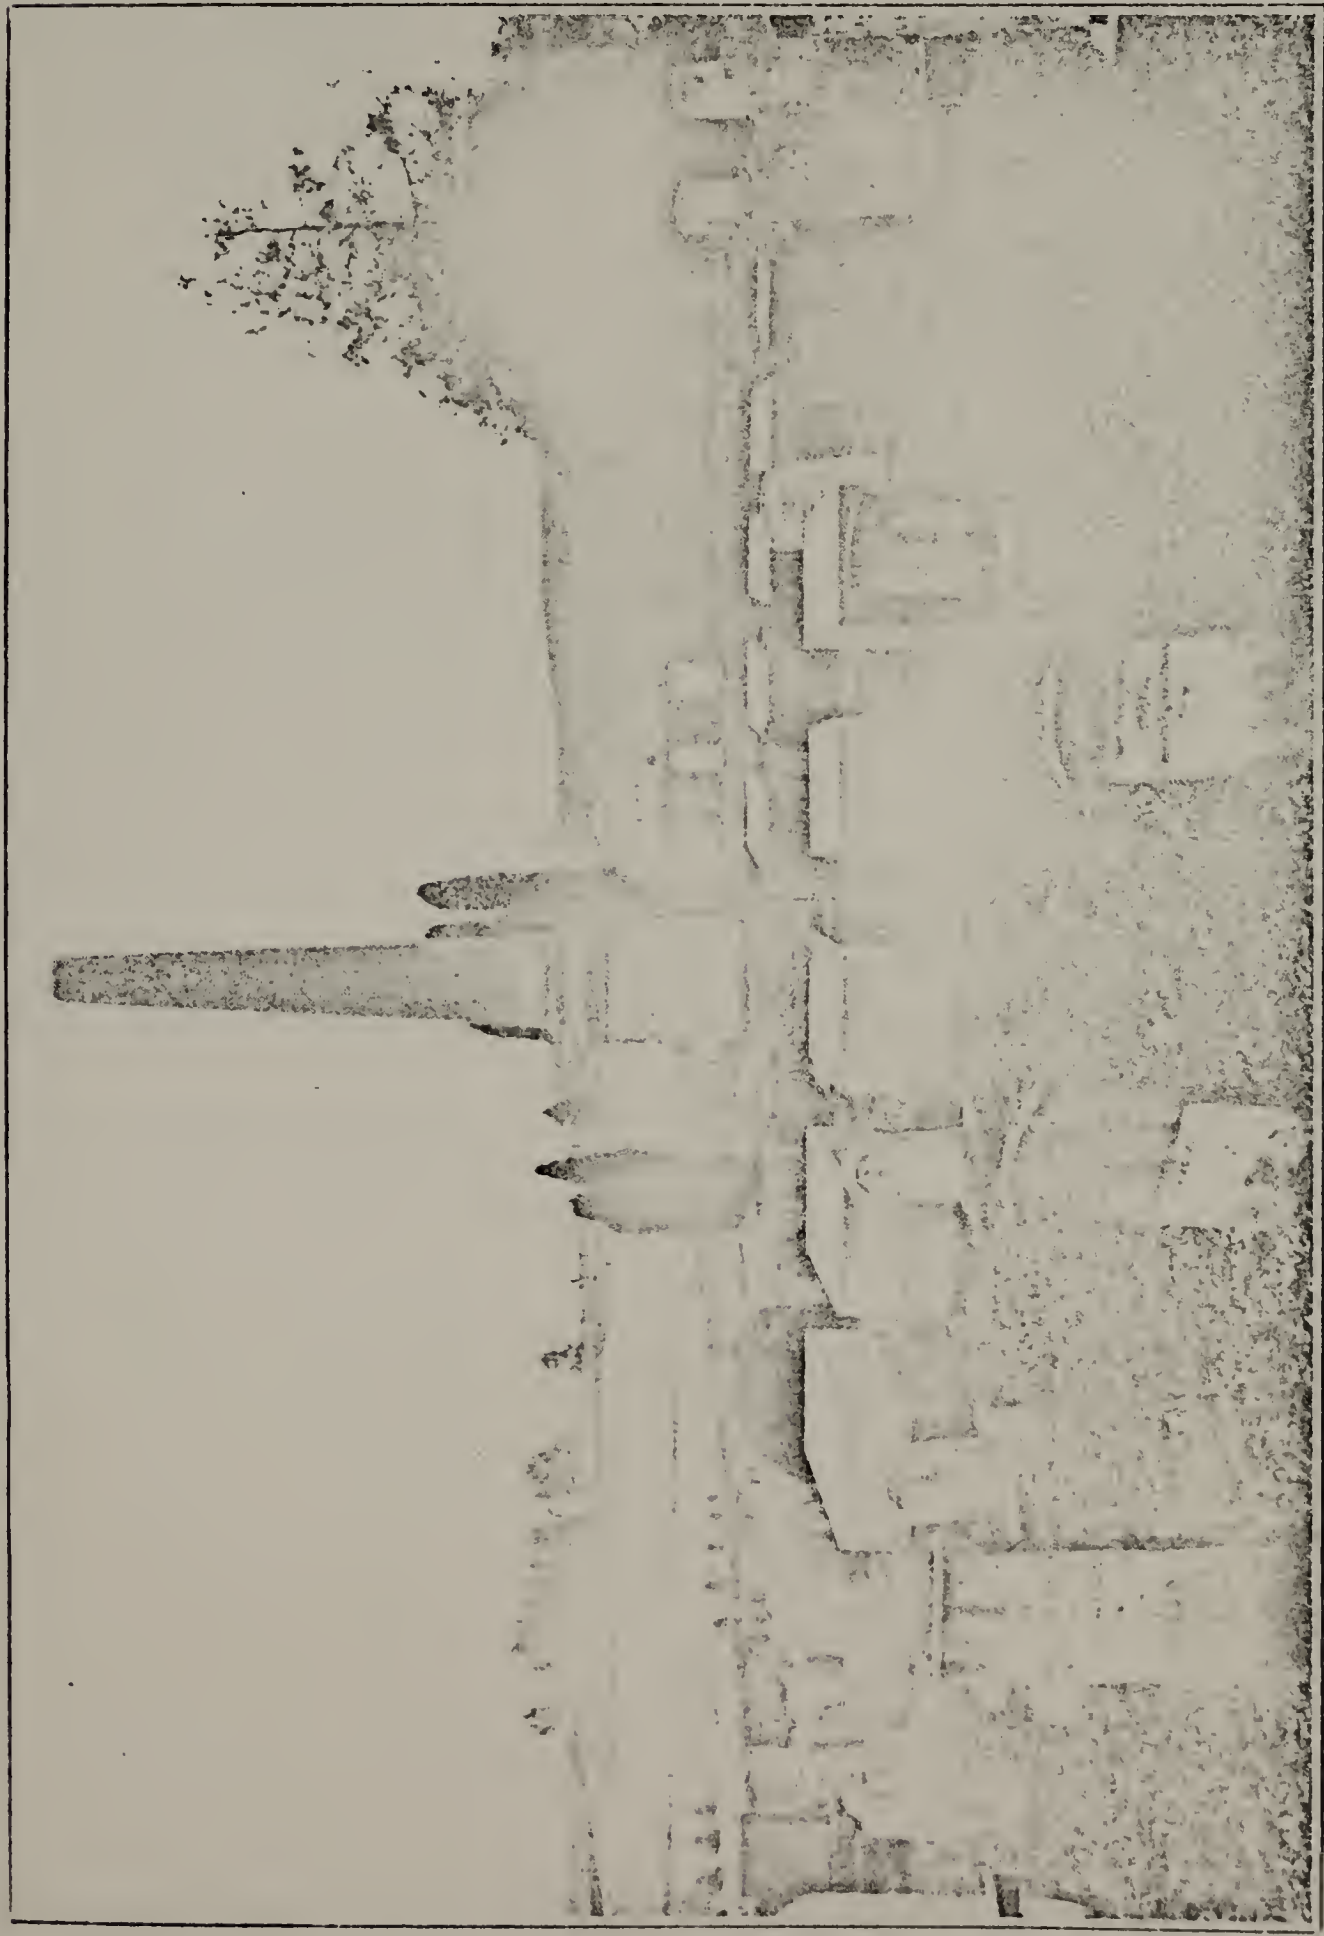

Note—The alteration of the word two to four in the third page and eighteenth line and the addition of the words without interest in the 19th line made before acknowledged.

In testimony of the above, I, Robert McCormick, have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal this twenty-second day of June, 1846.

ROBERT MCCORMICK (SEAL)

* * * * *

Of Robert McCormick's wife, Mary Ann Hall, it may be said that her father was Patrick Hall who had come from near Londonderry in 1770 and settled in Augusta County, Virginia. Patrick fought both in the Revolution and the War of 1812. Regarding Mary Ann, who was born on June 24th, 1780 and who was therefore within a few days of the same age as her husband, I quote as follows by permission of the publishers of Professor William T. Hutchinson's work: "Mary Ann McCormick, or Polly as she was familiarly known, enjoyed a reputation for efficiency. By the fireside or in the harvest fields she was equally in her element. She was determined to thrust herself and her family ahead in the world, and her children found her ready at all times to listen, sympathetically to their dreams. She took pride in her silver, her peacocks, and her stylish carriage, and she liked to drive rapidly along the rough country roads, behind a spirited team. Her attention to dress and her love of display made less prosperous neighbors wag their heads and gossip about her extravagance and pride. Impulsive of tongue, she nevertheless had many friends, and the home at 'Walnut Grove' entertained much company. Under her direction the McCormick household was well managed, and her children in later years centered their recollection of her about her love for them. Her nervous energy and business talent well supplemented the less aggressive character of her husband."

OLD PROVIDENCE GRAVEYARD

After her husband's death in 1846 Mrs. McCormick continued to live at "Walnut Grove" with the affectionate sanction of her son William who now owned the property. After William left for Chicago at about the end of 1849 to take his part in the rapidly developing reaper business, Mary Ann was left in the Old Dominion to reside with her only child, Amanda, who still lived in the Valley after her marriage to Hugh Adams in 1845. On June 1st, 1853, the wife of Robert McCormick died of typhoid fever at the age of 72 and she now lies buried by her husband at Old Providence.

* * * * *

Robert and Mary Ann (Hall) McCormick had issue eight children: Cyrus Hall, Robert Hall, Susan Jane, William Sanderson, Mary Caroline, Leander James, John Prestly, and Amanda Joanna. Of these five sons and three daughters, five, or three sons and two daughters, left the descendants recorded on the ensuing tables. The second child, Robert Hall, was born on May 24th, 1810 and died at the age of sixteen on June 28th, 1826 at "Walnut Grove"; the third child Susan Jane, who was born on August 1st, 1813, while the country was at war with England, had died on the previous day, June 27th, both being carried off by dysentery or what was then known as the "flux." The seventh child, John Prestly grew into a fine manhood but little has come down concerning him. John Prestly was born on November 8th, 1820 and died at the age of 28 on September 4th, 1849, at "his mother's home in Virginia," presumably "Walnut Grove." There appears to be no record of his participation, if any, in the manufacture or distribution of his father's inventions. He did not marry.

* * * * *

In conclusion, it is permissible to quote from a letter recently received by the compiler from a gentleman of early Pennsylvania descent: "It is a great honor to be descended from Robert McCormick, as I regard him as perhaps the greatest benefactor of mankind who ever lived. I have talked him up for many years and pointed him out as an example of one who would be amply rewarded for his inventions by humanity in general."
